BLUE OSTRICH TRIES TO DIE

Attempts Suicide With Piece of Hose Upon Landing at New York From Bermuda.

Mike, a fighting ostrich from the wilds of Africa, that found his way by hook or crook to Bermuda, attempted suicide or something like that by shooting himself in the right eye while despondent, after he was landed at New York from the steamship Oceana.

As Mike doesn't speak our language well, no one knows what gave him the "blues," but he knew immediately he was lowered over the Oceana's side that he was in a foreign clime that wouldn't in the least appeal to his health.

So Mike, eight feet tall and as full of fight as a Kilkenny cat, spied a length of hose on the pier as he fell out of his crate. He pressed a claw on one end of the piece of hose and gripped the other end in his beak. Then, keeping the hose taut, he released his claw grip and the hose flew back and whacked him on the right optic. Mike saw his first attempt was futile, but before he could make a second attempt a gang of longshoremen pounced upon him.

Mike, even though he had as black an eye as an ostrich could have, went after the longshoremen in such fashion that most of them took to the rafters. Those who were not swift enough he clawed and pecked. Finally they got a gunny sack over Mike's head and subdued him.

A charge of attempted suicide was preferred against Mike and he was put back in the ship's hold to think anew on the sweetness of life.

HAS TREATMENT FOR TETANUS

German Scientist Tells How He Successfully Combated the Dread Malady.

A student in Professor von Behring's laboratory accidentally broke a flask of tetanus germs, fragments of the glass penetrating among the tendons of the palm of his hand. Von Behring describes in the Deutsche Medizinische Wochenschrift how he treated the case, which was about the most terrible wound a man could have, for millions upon millions of tetanus germs must have entered.

After antiseptic treatment an injection of antitoxin was made in the arm. The wound healed, but after four days lockjaw set in in the legs, shoulders, jaws and eyelids. The right arm pit was opened, the main nerve trunks isolated and infiltrated with the most powerful serum. The tetanus was at once checked; it soon vanished and it has not recurred, though four months have elapsed.

Von Behring says the poison of tetanus at once combines with the nerve endings in the muscles. It enters the blood, where it can be neutralized by injections of antitoxin. The only hope in a serious case like that of this student is to apply the serum directly to the main nerve trunks. The Medical Record comments that as Von Behring does not mention the dried antitoxin as a wound dressing nor the injection of the serum into the spine, he indicates a radical modification in the treatment.

The Coward.

"Has that young man given you any encouragement, daughter?"

He whipped the dog and it refused to track him further. The man got away. Archie Beadle saw him as he ran but no one got close enough to lay hands on him. No one seems to have much idea who the man is or how he came to be in the condition he was.
